DRIVE OF CANTONESE TROOPS NOW IN FULL FORCE, IS REPORT

Marshall Chiang Kai-Shek Is Leading The Attack

GETS REINFORCEMENTS

Sun Chuan-Fang Troops Are Weakened Through Treachery

SHANGHAI, Feb. 17 (I. N. S.)—The long anticipated drive by the Cantonese troops under Marshal Chiang Kai-Shek, having for its object the capture of Shanghai, was on in full force today. The Cantonese and the forces of General Sun Chuan-Fang, governor of Chekiang province, were locked in desperate battle a few miles south of Hangchow.

The Cantonese launched their attack yesterday, following the arrival of heavy reinforcements from Szechuan and Hupeh.

The Sun Chuan-Fang troops, weakened by treachery within their own ranks, fought desperately, but were forced to retreat, and last night Hangchow was in considerable danger of being captured by the Cantonese. Today, however, with the dispatching of heavy reinforcements of Sun troops, it was believed this danger had been largely offset.

Both sides lost heavily in the fighting yesterday, and the fighting today continued with equal severity.

UNTANGLING RADIO MESS

Agreement has at last been reached between the senate and house conferees at Washington on the troublesome issue of inaugurating government control over interstate and foreign radio transmission. No doubt they would have been longer stalemated but for the fact that the general public is of one opinion on the matter and not a little importunate.

Under the approved plan control for the first year would be in the hands of a federal commission of five members. After the expiration of that year control would be centered in the secretary of commerce with right of appeal to the commission.

Aside from giving the government authority to regulate radio transmission, assign wave lengths, determine location of stations and establish zones, the bill expressly provides that where radio programs are paid for by individuals or firms announcement of the fact must be made. Stations permitting a political candidate to broadcast would be compelled to extend similar courtesies to rival candidates. All of these provisions will aid greatly in eliminating grievances and causes of complaint.

Radio regulation is not so simple a problem that it can be solved by a single congressional bill. Experience will uncover defects and shortcomings in any control scheme. But that should not deter congress from undertaking the experiment. The radio public will excuse flaws that may be found in any control law congress may enact, but it will not excuse failure by congress to put into force some method of radio control before the end of this congressional session.

PEDESTRIAN'S RIGHTS

There is need of better understanding of the rights of pedestrians in the streets. As matters stand, even careful drivers of motor vehicles seldom give the right of way to pedestrians except where there are signals, and where there is a policeman to intercede for the person on foot. When the semaphore turns or the lights change, automobiles and trucks dash forward though the street is not yet cleared of pedestrians. And where neither signs nor traffic officers are present to guarantee the pedestrian his rights, he must yield under nearly all circumstances to vehicular traffic.

The situation is not due to a disposition to recklessness or deliberate intention to infringe upon the rights of others, but the driver of a fast-moving vehicle proceeds on the assumption that it is easier for people on foot to wait or to get out of the way than it is for him to stop.

But the fact should not be overlooked that when an accident occurs in these circumstances the courts are not unkind of the pedestrian's privileges and rights, one of which is the use of street crossings. Exercise of it often has to be at the risk of life and limb, and it is well for the peace of mind and the pocketbook of motorists and for the safety of those dependent on Shank's mare that this legal license is not pushed by all walkers to its logical conclusion.

Unfortunately the human mind is not developed to that Utopian state where every driver and every pedestrian approaching neutral territory would instinctively awaken to a realization of his full responsibilities and the other fellow's rights.

From the picture "A Regular Scout" starring Fred Thomson.

THE STORY SO FAR
Johnny the cowboy, talking to the skeptical old-timer, praises a certain Fred Blake, champion bucking-horse rider of the 1925 Coyote Plains rodeo, as the equal of any "old-time" Western hero. As they talk Johnny espies Fred himself, and introduces the old-timer to him. The aged Westerner is won over by Fred's infectious smile and good manners. Fred says he will defend his rodeo laurels and see if he can't win another cup for his mother. Their home is in Arizona, a good way off. Fred approaches Ben Halliday, rodeo official.

"Guess I'll enter the bucking event again, Ben. A champion ought to defend his title," he grinned. "Hear yuh got some mighty good boys out today. How's the competition look?"

Halliday snuffed. "Aw, they won't hurt you, Fred. Ain't enough real men these days. Guess yuh'll win it easy enough. Anythin' else?" He made a few marks in his notebook.

Fred threw down his saddle and looked over at the horse-stands at the far end of the field. There were scores of horses left there by their owners, but his keen eyes picked out a large white mount standing quietly where he had been left, gazing at his fellows with a slightly indulgent roll of his intelligent large eyes. Fred turned back, reassured, and said:

"One more, Ben. I want to take a whack at the Wild Horse stunt. I've been sort of practical on some broncos the boys just got down at the local ranch, and I guess I ought to be able to keep my seat in this show."

"Guess yuh ought!" said Halliday.

Suddenly leaping up into blue air and half-somersaulting . . .

day, warmly. "Show 'em some thud", I'm with yuh. How's Silver?"

The quiet eyes of Fred Blake, usually placid and non-committal, now grew warm and bright at mention of the name. He thrust his finger under his belt and laughed shrilly.

"Silver, Ben Halliday," he said, "is the one horse in the world who's always all right. I wouldn't trade that wonderful piece of God's horse-flesh for four wives and a mansion on Fifth avenue, New York. Gosh! He's almost human! Why, the other day I was teachin' him a new trick, and when I showed him what to do he blarneyed me and said he didn't want to improve on my lesson! He's a wonder, that horse." He was flushed and excited, and Halliday smiled.

"Yuh got it bad, Fred," he said quietly. "I once had a boss like that, too. Died on me—road-agent put him out of commission with a bullet. Intended for my carcass. Blast his soul! If I ever meet that damned thief in Hades I'll make him wish he'd got me that time! Yeh, I know how yuh feel about Silver. Look at him now!"

Fred whirled around. The rail at which the horses were tied was clattered with scores of reins, draped securely. The large white horse picked at the rein that held him until he had loosened it, whereupon with almost a gay tilt of the head he swung back, pushed a gray sorrel contemptuously aside, and beaded at an easy lope toward the judge's stand, at which Fred and Halliday were talking. He edged up to Fred, stuck his white muzzle deliberately on his chest, and made a little soft horse-noise. Fred's eyes were shining, but he said gruffly:

"Didn't I tell yuh to stay there till I called yuh? Didn't I? Answer me, Silver!"

Silver shook his head in a violent negative and snuggled closer. Halliday threw back his head and roared. Fred patted Silver's head and said:

"Go on back now, Silver. And stay there, yuh damned angel!"

Silver dropped his fine white face low in shame, touched his lips to Fred's shoulder, and trotted obediently back to the horse-rack. Fred watched him go with a curious light in his face.

The rodeo by now was in full activity. The first of the bucking contestants was already bobbing violently up and down on the back of a vicious looking mare, holding fast to the short neck-rein and whooping wildly. Fred turned to look, and Halliday was called away. At that moment a bustling little man hurried up and said:

"Yuh Fred Blake?"

"Yes."

"What about gittin' started?"

Fred picked up his extra saddle and strode toward the "buckers." An announcer with a red face ran up toward the stands and yelled through cupped hands:

"The next event, lad-ees an' gentlemen, is goin' to be an exhibition o' buckin'-horse ridin' by the feller that holds the 1925 championship of the Coyote Plain races! Watch him whoop'er up! Fred Blake!"

There was a deafening roar of applause, and Fred, astride the top rail of the horse's hastily-improvised corral, waved his hat in response. The animal directly below him looked harmless enough. He was small, spindly-legged, and apparently mild of disposition. His head hung low as with one eye half-closed he watched the man above him. Suddenly, with a swift, smooth movement, Fred was in his saddle and tightening the girths. The horse showed the surprise he felt, and for a moment stood stock still, twisting his neck comically to see what had dared to drop upon him so unceremoniously. Two men yelled, "Ready?" and Fred nodded his head, tightening his grip on the reins. The horse quivered, small ridges of his black hide oscillated with a nervous movement, and Fred felt the tremor run through his slender body. The barrier shot up, and for an instant Fred thought the world had gone topsy-turvy. He barely realized that the maddened beast had bounded rabbit-like into the dust of the plain when a powerful twist of the animal's body half lifted him out of the saddle. "Yuh will, will yuh?" he grunted, and clamped his legs with the firmness of steel grips around the horse's belly. He snapped his hat irritably at tender portions of the beast's head and neck, and with wild plunges and upward undulations the black horse tried to unseat this leech clinging to his back and sides. The plain, the stands, the figures of the officials running about near him, whirled and dropped before Fred's eyes, but he kept twitching the horse up and down with every infuriated leap. The aerial dust raised by the horse's hoofs blinded and choked him, but for the moment he thought of nothing but the necessity of anticipating every devilish trick in the black beast's bag. And they were many. Fred was managing to keep his seat on Black Satan, a tough rodeo-hardened animal with a record of four killings to his credit, but the firmness of steel grips around the horse's belly. He snapped his hat irritably at tender portions of the beast's head and neck, and with wild plunges and upward undulations the black horse

Suddenly it was over. The official raised his hand, his eyes on his watch, and the three horsemen who had been circling the buckler closed in with admiration on their browned faces. Fred dropped wearily off Black Satan's back and grasped the proffered hand of the official.

"That was mighty neat ridin', Fred," he said heartily. "Guess yuh won't have no trouble keepin' yuh seat." The damned boss met his master, I reckon."

Fred smiled through the dust and perspiration on his face, and looked anxiously toward the horse-rack. Even at that distance he sensed reproach in the eyes of Silver, who stood obediently where he had been told to.

"Guess I'll have to placate Silver," he said. "Looks mighty hurt to me. There's one horse I've got to keep on good terms with."

Waving his hand, he walked off. Several slaps on the back greeted him as he neared Ben Halliday, busy checking up a long list of events. He smiled and said:

"Take my name off that Wild Horse races, will yuh, Ben? Silver looks almost pestered at me, and I guess I'm goin' to hit it for home. I've defended my right to that cup, and the boys ought to be satisfied. S'long."

He turned and headed for the horse-rack. Halliday stared after him. The old-timer, still perched on his rail, puffed at a cigarette and remarked drily to Johnny the cowboy:

"There goes a dinged good man, Johnny. . . . He smoked a while. 'I take it back, son. That was rodeo-ridin'!"

Fred clucked to Silver, and the big white horse trotted eagerly to his side. Swinging up a trifle wearily, Fred leaned down and whispered in Silver's ear. "Got a hunch, old son. Better be hittin' it for home. Mother needs us."

Schedule

February 22—R. & H. vs. Phila. Sub.
February 23—Amisson vs. Pacific.

All the reading bowling teams were taken by complete surprise last week when they were defeated one game each in their matches with teams far below them in standing.

Tuesday evening the Huff-Dalanders rose to their highest and snatched the last game from Rohm & Haas and put them as it was considered out of the race.

Friday evening the Harriman club caught Pacific unawares and grabbed a game, which put Pacific out of running until Y. M. A. came to the rescue and showed the firemen that they were capable of doing their share in the upsetting of the dope, too.

It now runs into the last round of the first half with No. 2 leading by one game over Rohm & Haas and Pacific.

Wednesday evening the fire ladders meet the airplaners and it is the intention of the Huff-Dalanders to keep up the upsetting, in which event the boiler makers and chemical manufacturers will have to break the run of two of three and make clean sweeps of their matches to make it a three-cornered tie, which would have to be played off before the second half begins, as the winners of both halves meet following the completion of the second half to determine the league champions.

The league has ordered the team prize which will be on display shortly. The prize is a beautiful bowling emblem and well worth the honor of possessing. Various other prizes have been displayed.

This modern age recognizes the honest quality of Camels

THE smokers of America have rewarded Real Quality with Real Leadership.

For Camels have always been all quality and no frills. The choicest tobaccos money can buy, superbly blended. Millions of dollars put into the cigarette. Never a penny expended for show.

There's just one way to find the smoking thrill that has won the modern world's admiration — try Camels. You'll know such taste and fragrance, such mellow mildness, as you never hoped to find. "Have a Camel!"

Missionary To Africa Tells Of Trip To Another Mission Station In Heart Of Africa

path but I said "No" and we traveled along through the heat of the day until I reached Adi at 4:30. The folks had quite given me up when I did not arrive at noon and were somewhat surprised that I got the natives to bring me through. I am sure it was the Lord's doing. I permitted some of the men to linger another night while the others came with me with goods that I would need for the night.

The boys said that we passed animals on the path but never once did I see one for which I am grateful. Adi is frequently visited by lions, leopards, monkeys, etc.; so although not right in the jungles, we are not far from it it seems. Occasionally one can hear them at night prowling about. I haven't seen any yet. The Lord is good and does protect wonderfully, does He not?

Never along the path did I have any fear of being alone, even though the mud rest camps were all open (no doors) and the territory was new and strange to me. So on the whole I had a fairly good trip for my first safari alone and you will agree with me, I am sure, that it was a real one. The last two days the men carrying my chair dropped me quite a bit at every brook they came to. It seems like every five minutes to me. Yesterday I had a touch of fever as the results of same but I am OK again today and hope now I will not have any more.

At this writing, Mrs. Richardson and Miss Angus and myself are alone.

Mr. Richardson has been at Aba for a few days on business. He is expected tonight and I believe Dr. Sturton is coming with him for a day or so. Adi will no longer be the lonely station it has been for we hope that more people will be coming from time to time for their vacations, etc. One cannot come by motorcycle or truck—so must come by porter along the narrow, winding path through the jamba (tall grass). We hope sometime the government will put a road through and men the bridges so that we can get thru on bicycles, etc. I have just learned that my bicycle is on the way and I am so grateful. It will be such a great help.

Soon (after I am settled) I expect to take over the medical work for the boys. My training at school will come in handy. We have all sorts of disease here. The other day a woman came in with her sick baby. We examined the child and found she had pneumonia and treated it accordingly. The father of the child is the headman on the station for bricks (sun-dried mud bricks). In his absence because he refused to kill a chicken or goat and sacrifice, the wife skipped off to her peoples' village with the child. Sometimes they recover and sometimes not but the child was very ill and if anything happens to it she can but blame herself. This is the way these people (as well as all other tribes) do. Is it not sad? How they need the Saviour to help them and yet they—many of them—reject Him like those at home after hearing the message over and over again.

Last Sunday some 400 attended the native service. This was a small number for as a rule there are 500 or more. Now that we have come and when Mr. Richardson returns from Aba there will be even more I believe. Pray that God will work in the hearts of these people. Many have made professions but you know how far profession goes some times. We long for a definite, vital work to be done in their hearts to stand through all eternity so pray with us for the salvation of this tribe. Pray especially for the salvation of Chief "Drupa" who is so hard-hearted. He can neither read nor write and although our boys and evangelist have offered their services time and again he has no inclination for such. In time, we believe, the Government will do away with such ignorant chiefs for more and more it demands more of them and one who can neither read nor write will not stand much show—and it is rightly so.

When I can I will try and send some pictures home of Adi station and the work here. In the meantime, we trust you will continue to bear us up in prayer as you have so faithfully prayed for us in other places. The work is His work—it is all the same regardless of Stations and this, as you can see is real pioneer work, especially that the language is not reduced to writing. We must, therefore, get busy and "dig out" this native tongue and mind (all working together.)

This will give you a little idea of my trip, Adi and the work and as we go along I shall hope to write you much more interestingly.

Thanksgiving Day was a quiet one for me. I had school as usual. Was taking my meals with the Richardsons (who are English folk) so naturally they would not celebrate as we Americans do but we did have a prayer meeting at night and I am sure they, as well as myself received great blessing as we prayed for you all at home.

By the way I had a lovely plum plucking, however, that my friend Mrs. Ortega sent out from home. It arrived just in the nick of time too.

A Word With the Old Folks

Elderly People Are Learning Importance of Good Elimination.

IN the later years of life there is apt to be a slowing up of the bodily functions. Good elimination, however, is just as essential to the old as to the young. Many old folks have learned the value of Doan's Pills when a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys is required. Scanty or burning passages of kidney secretions are often signs of improper kidney function. In most every community are scores of users and endorsers who claim the merit of Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

The Peace Offering
by ALEC TUPPER

AFTER a continuous fall of snow for over forty hours, the small town of Bethel was covered with a pure white mantle on the day before Christmas.

Over the hills the tinkling sound of sleigh bells was music upon the frosty air of the early winter morning as Judge John Wainwright looked out of the chamber window of his farmhouse. As he peered out of the little panes of glass with their tiny draperies of snow he saw Jasper Jones with his two-hitch plow breaking a way through the narrow Main street of the town, while an occasional salute of "Good mornin', Jasper!" came from neighbors as they shoveled paths from their gateposts.

"Reckon we'll have a real Christmas—snow nearly two feet deep—came down pretty heavy!" remarked Jasper.

The words "a real Christmas," with the sound of sleigh bells, rang all day long in the ears of Judge Wainwright, even after he had finished his supper in company with his wife and son Roland. "Polly" and his wife, Marion, lived with Judge and Mrs. Wainwright. Marion, being somewhat ill in her room, was unable to join in the evening meal.

After supper Judge Wainwright climbed the handsomely carved old colonial staircase, and when he had reached the seat on the landing he sat for a moment on the red velvet cushion to glance down at the hall with the tall clock ticking merrily and the log fire snapping happily, its rosy glow painting the white walls and their decorations of greenery—such a picture! And the Christmas joy of the olden days came to him. He had romped on these same stairs with a happy heart, with his sister Lucy at his heels. Yes, Lucy—there was the one shadow on the joys of Christmas Eve. Lucy had married against the wishes of her family, and as a result none of the family were on speaking terms with her, Lucy, a widow, feeble, but graceful in her age of seventy-five years, lived in the little cottage on the Wainwright estate, cut off with a very slight income by the will of her father, John Wainwright.

Judge Wainwright went up to his study and looked out of the dormer window upon the night. The sky was clear and a large star shone brightly above the distant hill of pine trees and all the other stars seemed to twinkle happily about it. The loveliness of the landscape charmed him, and, relaxing from any other thoughts, he turned the light very low and lay upon a couch near the window.

When a loud knock upon the door startled him he realized he had fallen asleep and the excited voice of Sarah, the colored maid, called to him that "Missus Marion done took very sick."

It was the midnight hour when Judge Wainwright again stood by his study window and glanced out again into the night. The big star was high and luminous and long beams seemed to stream from it and lay upon the little town of Bethel. A new joy had come into the Judge's heart, for a new-born babe had come into the home. And as he turned from the window he glanced at a pictured motto on the wall, placed there by his own mother. It read: "Blessed Are the Peacemakers, for They Shall Be Called the Children of God." Speedily the bitterness toward poor Lucy which had been in his heart for so many years had departed and the tears came to his eyes. He determined then to make the grandest peace upon the Christmas day. He would call upon Lucy himself, ask for her forgiveness and announce the glad tidings of a son—a most glorious gift bestowed by God in the old Wainwright homestead. It was a day of real Christmas rejoicing, upon which the spirit of the man who said "Peace upon earth" rested and the little town of Bethel had its share in the advent of a new citizen—John Wainwright, III.

American Santa Claus

The American Santa Claus is a corruption of the Dutch San Nicholas. G. H. McHugh says: "Santa Claus, the name derived from Saint Nicholas through the familiarity of children in Teutonic countries, crossed to America. The oldest reference to him is in a Dutch poem of 1617." On the way to the city of the future, Mrs. Edwin S. Huntsman was removed to the Jefferson Hospital, Philadelphia, on Saturday for treatment. Mrs. Huntsman fell a few weeks ago, and sustained a broken hip.

Gossip of Staff Correspondents at World Centers of Population

By Miller Holland

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
LOS ANGELES, Cal., Feb. 17.—What did George Washington look like when he was 25 years of age?

This poser was asked a few months ago by officials of the Merto-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Culver City.

And for a time it looked as if the question would keep right on being a poser because a diligent search throughout the United States failed to reveal the appearance of a young Washington.

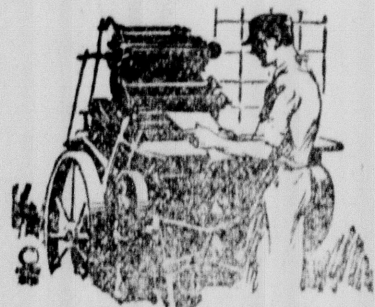

Then Science stepped in and solved the problem.

Anatomical experts, called in by the M. G. M. organization, worked on the problem for a while and have succeeded in reaching their conclusion.

Washington at 25, according to this scientific determination, was red-headed, blue-eyed, had a prominent nose, was thin-lipped, had a high forehead and prominent ears.

And the experts are positive that this description is an accurate one. They base their determination on the result of extensive studies and analysis of copies of Gilbert Stuart portraits of Washington, painted when he was much past middle age.

They also used a faded photograph of an ivory miniature of the first president, printed some twenty years before the American revolution. The result of this analysis enabled the experts to arrive at a determination which the film studio is assured is almost a speaking likeness of Washington when he was a major in the Virginia militia.

Glification of the tank corps during the world war is the feature of "The Patent Leather Kid," in which Richard Barthelmess is being starred by First National.

Evolution of the tank, from the time General Byng smashed the German front with them in a surprise attack in 1917, until the American army sent them plunging through the St. Mihiel salient and the Argonne forest during the closing days of the war, forms one of the most exciting chapters of the world conflict.

Barthelmess has the role of a boxer who, disinterested at first, eventually enters the war and is made a "tank nurse"—a soldier who follows in the wake of a tank and keeps an eye out for snipers and anti-tank guns.

The noted Irish artist, Power O'Malley of Dublin, has been chosen by Cecil B. DeMille to prepare a series of poster paintings for "The King of Kings." O'Malley comes to DeMille fresh from his winning of the famous Anoch Taitt medal of Dublin. This award has special importance because it is a revival from 625 B. C., when it was last granted. His work has been extremely wide in its range, covering Irish landscapes and brightly tinted American westerns, Irish, English and Indian portrait studies.

Players whose likenesses as beloved Biblical characters O'Malley will paint include H. B. Warner, Jacqueline Logan, Joseph Schildkraut, Ernest Torrence, Victor Varconi, Robert Edeson, Dorothy Cumming, Montague Love, Julia Faye, Casson Ferguson, Joseph Striker, Mabel Coleman, George Siegmann and others.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Feb. 18 (I.N.S.)—Four hundred and ninety-four persons were arrested and fines totalling $13,973.50 were paid by them during 1926, according to the detailed annual report of the State Fish Commission made public today. The report also revealed that the commission began the new year with a balance of $218,569.

The detailed report of arrests showed that the use of illegal devices was the chief infraction of the law detected. There were 155 arrests on that charge, while Pennsylvanians who did not bother to buy the necessary fishing license were second in the listing with 137 arrests. There were 25 non-residents and thirteen aliens arrested for fishing without a license. Those who neglected to heed the state law forbidding the pursuit of the piscatorial art on Sunday totaled forty-one.

Forty-three persons who retained under-sized fish were arrested. There were twenty-five arrests for fishing out of season, twelve for dynamiting and fourteen for exceeding the creel limit for certain prescribed species.

The financial statement of the commission showed that the sale of licenses to residents of the state netted $261,109 while non-residents paid $15,036. The total funds available for all sources for the commission were $493,432.

The chief expense item during the year was the operation of the six hatcheries for which $114,754 was paid. The next big item was the salaries and expenses of the wardens, $45,924 being charged to that account.

The report also showed that during the past year 326,736,567 fish of a score of species were distributed in the streams of the state. The cash value of the output from the hatcheries, based on prices charged by commercial places, was estimated at $545,787.

—William Wilkie, Jr., the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Wilkie, of Rose avenue and River Road, Crofton, Pa., who has been on the Pacific Coast for some time as a member of the crew of the U. S. S. Holland, left the crew of the U. S. S. Eagle No. 35 and is homeward bound for the Atlantic Coast. He will receive a furlough in the summer, which he will spend at his parents' home.

pleasure park. The upper end of the island is owned by the city of Burlington. The money for the sale of the lower end and the rentals from the upper end go toward paying the Burlington school debt. The money is in the custody of the Burlington Island Managers, an organization created by the state legislature.

Should the bridge be built across the island the city of Burlington still will enjoy the school fund and also will reap well through taxes on real estate development. Thus, through the bridge, Burlington will be a winner in two ways on the island alone.

Educators Give Junior Red Cross High Praise

Growing recognition by leading educators all over the world has been an achievement of the Junior Red Cross in the last fiscal year.

Included in those which have taken especially favorable cognizance of Junior Red Cross efforts are the World Federation of Education Associations at Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1925, the Department of Superintendence of the National Education Association, at Washington, 1926, and the National Education Association in Philadelphia, June, 1926. Various State educational bodies have confirmed this approval, the report adds.

As a phase of their work, the Juniors have developed contacts through exchange of correspondence, with similar Junior organizations in virtually every part of the world, and through the development of this medium many leaders see a better chance for world peace in future.

An especially notable development of Junior organization has occurred in Porto Rico, with an enrollment of 137,000, and the Philippines, with 912,900.

More than 5,000,000 American Juniors are at work in this organization of the American Red Cross. Their example is held out by the American Red Cross during the Tenth Annual Roll Call for membership, as one for all Americans to endorse by joining the parent organization during the period November 11 to 25 this year.
